f One of the fondest memories from childhood is being taken by one's parents on vacation to a new, interesting place and experiencing it together. So what could be a better Mother's Day gift in a family that loves to travel than a generational spin on a girls' getaway: a daughter's travel present to her mother for the two to do together. Particularly if it's to one of the mother's prime bucket list destinations in the world.

India A country of such diversity, color, majestic structures and overall sensory overload needs to be experienced in curated bites. For a mother and daughter on an initial trip, The Explorations Company suggests a 13 day trip taking in a range of India's special experiences. Starting in New Delhi at the elaborately decorated, well located Leela Palace New Delhi, the trip continues by road to Agra to view the Taj Mahal at sunrise and a stay at The Oberoi Amarvilas which has views of the iconic landmark from every window. The trip continues by train to Ranthambhore National Park and a luxury tent at Sujan Sher Bagh, a camp designed as a throwback to the lavish safari camps of 1920's princes and the only place, due to their expert guides, that I've ever actually seen tigers in India.
